It is the policy of The Sydney Rudolf Steiner College that all students and staff enjoy a learning and working environment free from harassment, that being behavior which is uninvited and unwanted.

All harassment which is sexual, racist, gender-based, or relates to a person's marital status, age, disability, pregnancy or sexual preference is discriminatory and will not be tolerated by this organisation. Most types of harassment are also against state or federal anti-discrimination laws, and may also be an offence under the Crimes Act.

It is the Sydney Rudolf Steiner College's policy that:

- Harassment or discrimination will not be tolerated under any circumstances.
- All harassment or discrimination complaints will be treated seriously, quickly and sympathetically.
- Confidentiality is crucial and will be respected when a harassment or discrimination complaint is made.
- All harassment or discrimination complaints will be investigated fairly and objectively.
- Necessary action will be taken to make sure the harassment or discrimination stops.
- People making harassment or discrimination complaints will be investigated fairly and objectively.
- Necessary action will be taken to make sure the harassment or discrimination stops.
- People making harassment or discrimination complaints and witnesses will not be victimised in any way for making a complaint.

What is Harassment?

Harassment is any physical, verbal and non verbal behaviour which is not asked for and not wanted.

Harassment is usually repeated, and occurs because of a person's sex, race, age, marital status, disability or sexual preference.

A single incident may constitute harassment.

Harassment is offensive, upsetting and humiliating. It makes the work and study environment uncomfortable and unpleasant. Harassment is not always intended - acts or behaviour which are humorous or don't signify anything to one person, may hurt and offend another.
